In a big city, among big modern buildings, there lived an old house.

In the past few years, the house got quite damaged but it still looked rather beautiful.

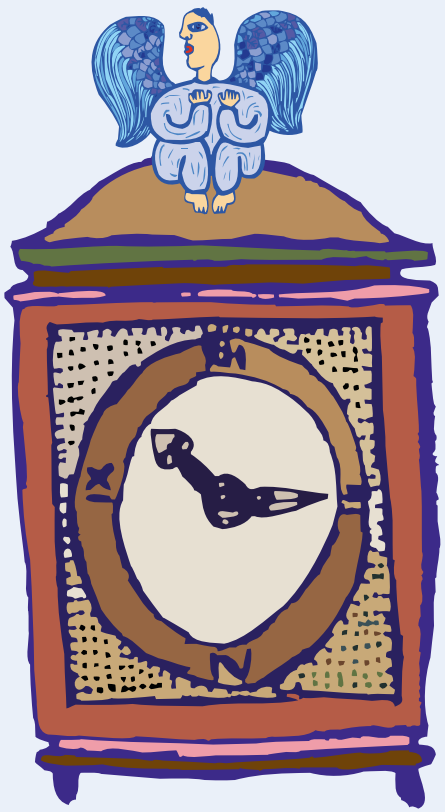

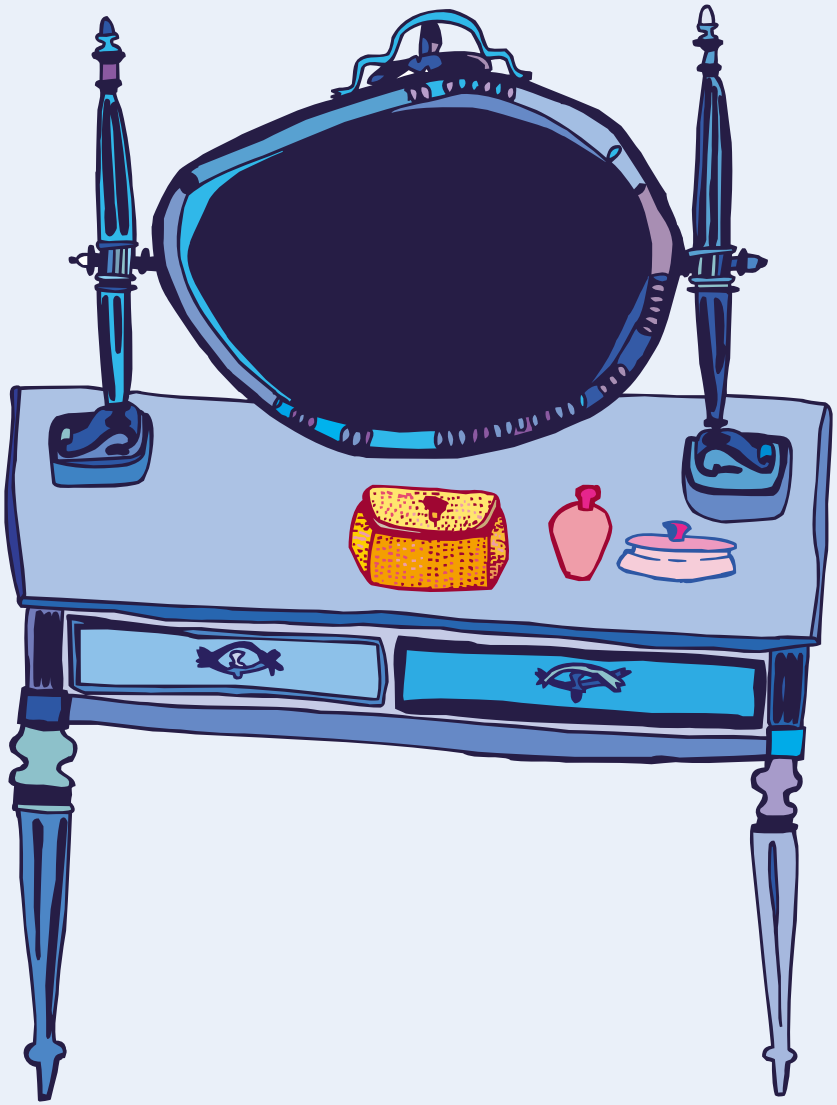

In this house, together with the owners, there lived many antique things. The things kept memories.

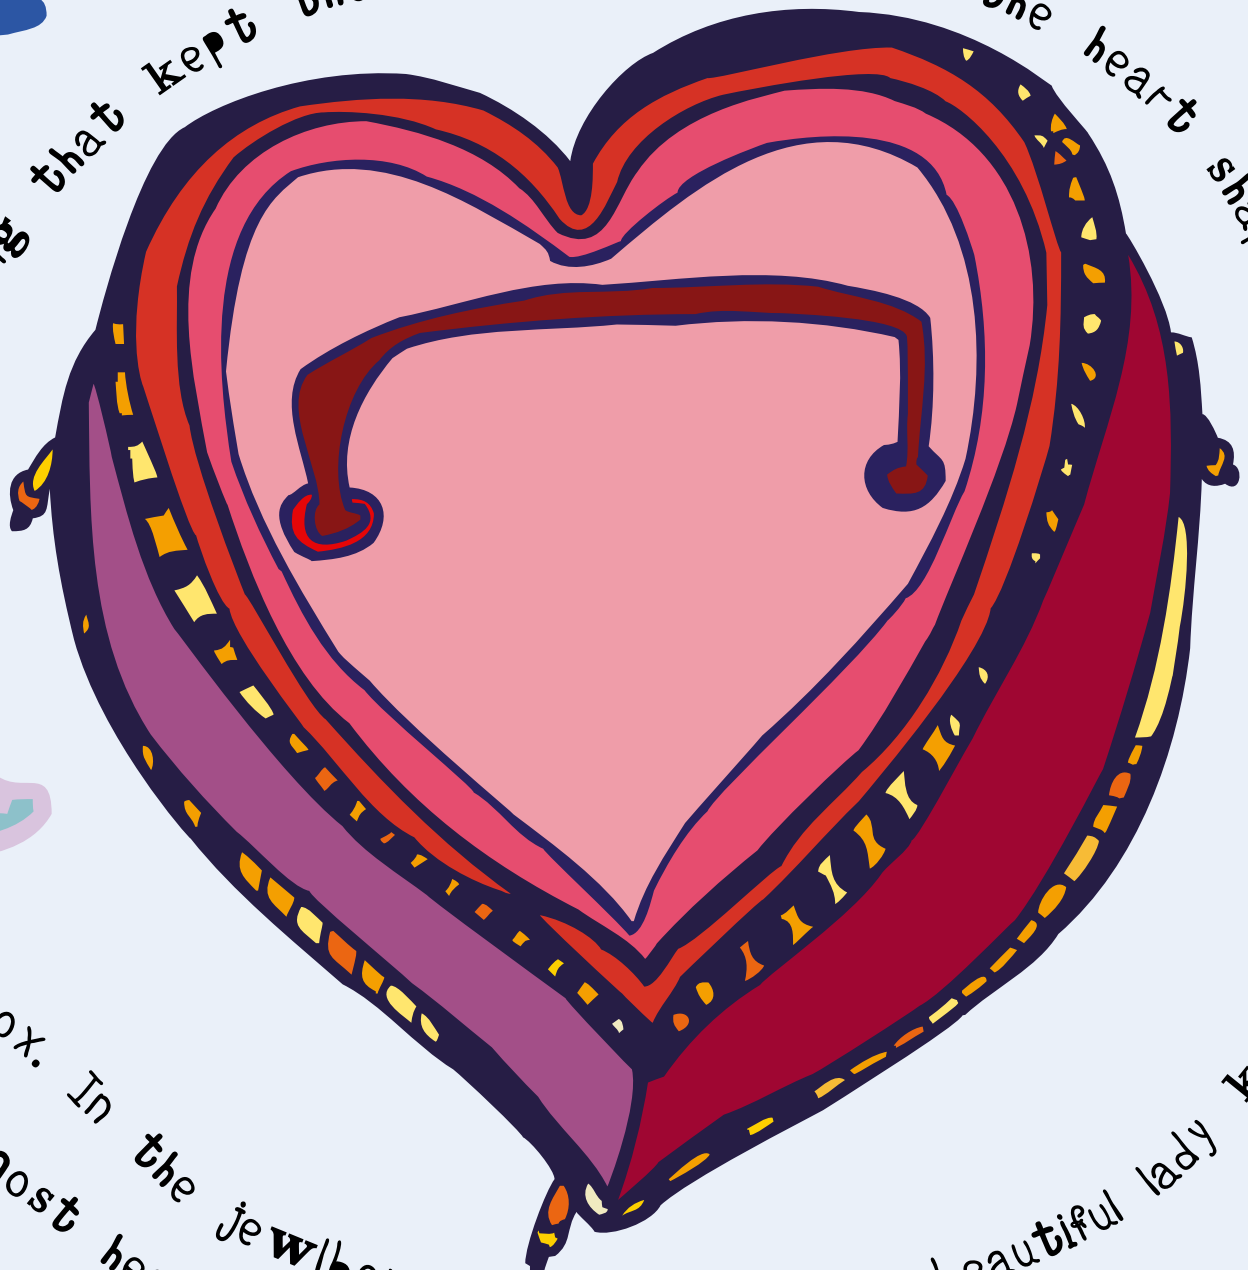

About beautiful ladies who wore beautiful dresses.

About noble men who rode horses.

The thing that kept the most memories was the heart shaped jewlbox. In the jewlbox, one outstandingly beautiful lady kept her most heartfelt items.

White gloves, an elegant monocle, a fan, dried rose leaves and several yellowed photos.

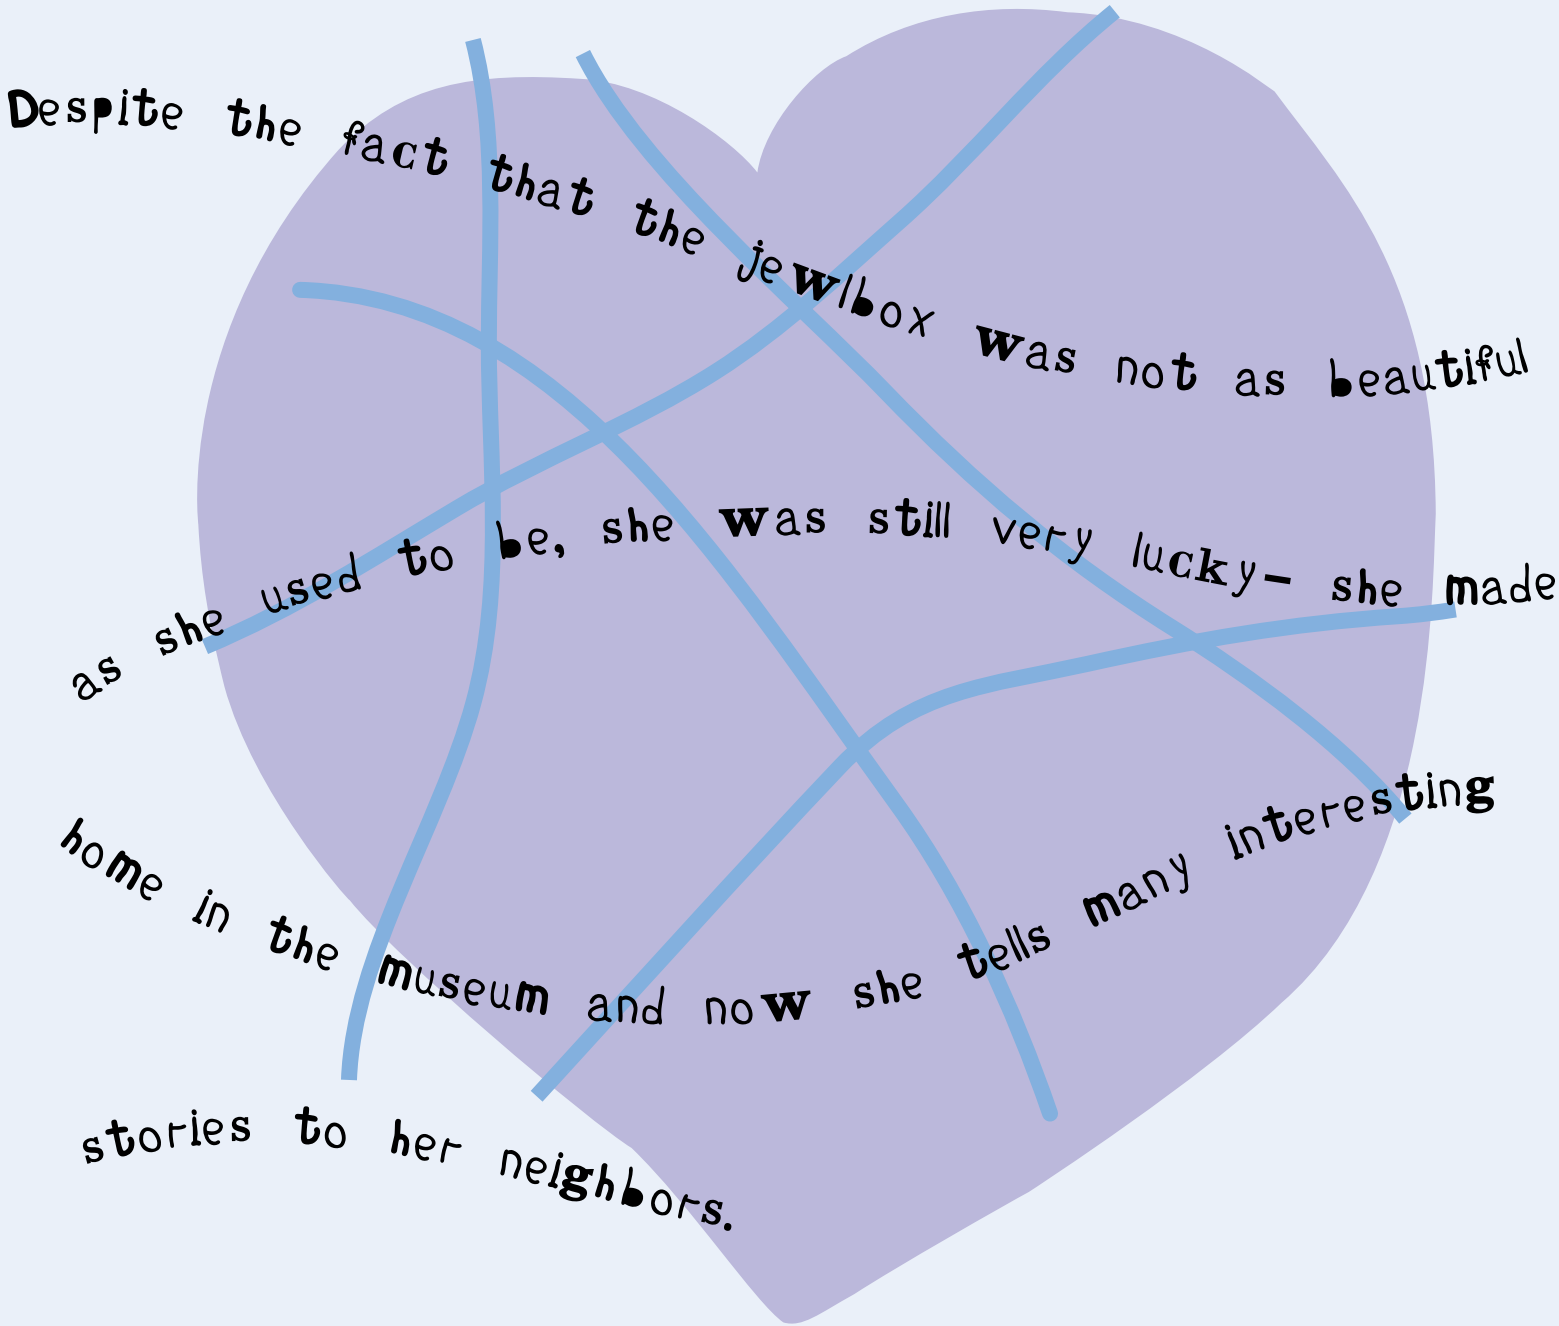

They built a new building in place of the old house. They gave out the apartments in the building. In transit the jewlbox broke and they moved the precious items from the old box into a new box.

They didn't like their new home but what was to be done?

The broken pieces of the jewlbox were found by a historian.

The historian loved old things and he glued the pieces of the jewlbox together.

Despite the fact that the jewlbox was not as beautiful as she used to be, she was still very lucky- she made home in the museum and now she tells many interesting stories to her neighbors.
